miles from Calais, the escorting fleet fired a salute and returned. It was odd that there was no French man-of-war to receive the Sultan. and we steamed unattended into Calais. There all glad to start by the special train which awaited us. The Profet and Sons-Profet received the Sultan, and a back carriage conveyed him to the station. We went forward merrily as long as we were on the French line, and passed pleasantly through miles of little fields, or rather gurdens, teeming with fertility, but nobody took any notice of the "special train" till we crossed the Belgian frontier. Then Les Braves Belges really distinguished themselves, and many voices still hearso with obsering in England were to be heard "making night ideous" at every station. I am sure that the whole army of Belgium was under arms all night. Also the National Guard, one officer of which had evidently "improved the occasion" of sitting up late, and, finding a fellow in a fez, took him for the Sultan. Translated from Belgian-French into intoxicated English, his oration van thus: "Stop with ush night Sultaneh; smallsh country, big beart sch.

Rome from the hands of an aristocratic oliga-ground on which to argue, from the difficult or impossibility of unravelling the history of the past, and assigning each thread of the we to the particular agency which spun it. No body, for instance, can say with certainty hos much Ionatina Lovola or Peter the Hormi initiated for themselves, or how much material in the shape of floating spiritual fanaticism they found ready to their hand. Mr. Bucklewould say one thing about it, and the Empero of the French, who believes in the divinity o cleverness, would say another. Of course rational theory may be found to reconcile hold positions; for though they appear to be irre concileable, in reality they are nothing of the kind. A logical necessitarian need not dent the influence of Clesar, Columbus, and Ignatius Loyola. All that he would have to make ou would be that heroic character is itself a na tural growth, and not a miraculous or anner natural phenomenon. Still, after all, though logically reconcileable, the two views or theories logically reconcurable, the two views or theories do certainly represent antagonistic conditions of the mind on the part of those who hold them of the mind on the part of those who hold them

The question, therefore, whether heroes are manufactured by the age which they adorn, or whether, like Topsy, they grow independently of it, is worth a little consideration. No better times could be rejected for the purpose of such an examination than our own. The present generation is often called material and unromantic. To find romance in history sentimentalists go back to the ages of chivalry, of troubadours, and of cavaliers. There are no heroes now. we are for ever being told. Everything is dull, prosy, and matter of fact. The age of sentiment and imagination is over, and that of tradesmen and of Joint-Stock Companies has taken its place. It is curious that anybody should venture to make assertions of this kind who opens his eyes and looks about him. So far from such language being justified Apply to by facts, it seems altogether refuted by them. Never, so far as we know, was there a time when: all contemporary history seemed to resolve itself into the sayings and doings of a few great men more completely than at present. So far as grouping and picturesque effect goes, the story of the last fifteen years is quite as much the story of a knot of human beings as any three-volume tale. On the Continent it is the story of Napoleon III. of Cavour, of Garibaldi, of Mazzini, and of Biamark. At home it is! almost synonymous with the biography of Lord Palmerston, Mr. Cobben, Mr. Bright, Mr. Gladetone, and Mr. Disraeli. Nothing but matrimonial incident is wanted to make it a sensation romance. There is no love-making, no giving in marriage, and no heroine but in therefore the opportunity of observing heroes | closely, and can gather from our own observation and experience how much of their effect upon the world is due to anything which is not to be found in the world itself, If genius has a spell or a talisman with which it is able to affect civilization and to change the very course of events, now is the time for seeing it. We think a little investigation will show that, so far as any of these men are great, it is not because they have been born great, but because and now in the occupation of CALEB. T. SMITH. they have become so under the influence of ex- Esq. Apply to In the strict cense of the word, there is not a single one of all the group of celebrities who may not be called a representative man. Withdraw from him his representative character, and he would sink back into the crowd behind him, on whose shoulders he has been carried on to success. Out of all of these there are but two who have ever pretended to be mysteries. There is the Corsican mystery and the Caucasian; but Apply to all the rest are aware, and would be candid current probably to avow, that they are only the spokesmen of a numerous following, and c and Mr. Cobden, for instance, no more created by to the Manchester school than Luther made the Reformation. They found the tide flowing, they swam boldly with it, and it carried them inwards in its front. The difference between them and others consists, not in their own energy, but in the force which backs them from behind, and forces them into the van. Mr. Lowe, as far as intellectual acuteness is concerned, is the equal or the superior of both. Yet Mr. Lowe is powerless besido them, simply because he stands alone is fed by his own fuel, and is not propelled by popular steam which i generated behind. It is faue that Mr. Bright is a very considerable orator. This, however, i not the secret of his success, but only the reason! why he has been chosen, on the principle of nainral selection, to succeed. If he had not been eloquent, somebody else would have been found who was: or, if the arts of rhetorio were scanty at the moment among Manchester politicians, their place would have been supplied, and their work by done, by some other gladiator who was armed with a substitute for eloquence. Lord Palmerstontopasstoanother specimen of successfulmen. ruled the House of Commons only so far as he embodied the floating common sense of thou-sands outside its walls. His tact and his know-ledge of affairs fitted him for se prominent a function. But how little it was Lord Palmerston himself that swayed the councils of the nation may be seen from the rapidity with which his name has been forgotten. Nobody now quotesLord Palmerston as an authority. Nobody looks back to him as to a political phiany particular constituency; but a delegate he L of two Offices and spacious Godown, latewas, representing always accurately the senti-ments of the majority whom he was supposed to govern, and falling from power the very instant that he ceased to represent them faithfully. It may be said that the sudden loss of any of these leaders would have temporarily paralysed the party or the cause to which they belonged. This no doubt is so. When one champion disappears it takes a little time to choose and train his successor. But it is not the less true that the greatest leader is far less necessary to his friends than he or even they ) imagine, and that every party and every cause can afford to say to itself Invenies alium, si te hie fastidit, Alexim, Even if we take such exceptional cases as those of the Emperor of the French and the leader. of the Conservative party, the same observations apply to the full. Mr. Disraeli's, natural ! abilities are undisputed. But where at the prosent moment would Mr. Disraeli have been if for nearly twenty years he had not served the Conservative party as a faithful exponent of their views? He certainly would not have been heeause he was fittest for their purpose. But Mesers. E.
